

ABSTRACT

A method, apparatus, and system to directly transition an integrated circuit having multiple states of performance from a first state of performance to the third state of performance based upon detecting a user event. The integrated circuit has multiple states of performance including a first state of performance, a second state of performance higher than the first state of performance, and a third state of performance higher than the second state of performance.